

LEADING A BREAKOUT SESSION

Description of Breakout Sessions

After each service, Community Camp Leaders will lead a “breakout session” where they will talk with students about what they learned through the message, and how they are going to apply these learnings to their lives.

Goal of Breakout Sessions

Lead a conversation that produces vulnerability, reflection, and life-change for the students.

Facilitate a discussion in this space that encourages students to take action on what they’ve learned.

Answer any questions students have about the message.

How to Lead Breakout Sessions

Take intentional notes during each message.

Pay close attention to what is said during each message.

Utilize the provided reflection questions as conversation starters. If you have discussion prompts of your own from each message, those can be used.

When getting to groups, understand that participation is a win, but life change is the goal. When in groups, see below:

“Open with openness.” Lead with vulnerability. Students are more open to share when someone else has already gone before them in doing so.

“Guard against gossip.” Do not allow students to talk negatively about any other individuals, whether they are at camp or not. If a student begins to share about an experience involving someone else, ask them to leave the individual nameless.

“Target transformation.” Through every question, conversation, and testimony - aim to lead the students to a transformative connection with the person of Jesus.

“Based in the Bible.” Whether it be correction, encouragement, or a challenge - bring it back to our authority - the Bible. The living, active, Word of God.
